The Canadian Urban Libraries Council (CULC) and the Canadian National Institute for the Blind (CNIB) have worked together to transition the library service provided by the CNIB to a newly established organization that will provide public libraries with the resources needed to serve Canadians with print-disabilities directly through their local public libraries. The new non-profit organization, the Centre for Equitable Library Access (CELA), was launched April 1, 2014 with 600 libraries across Canada joining to date, representing 85% of the population. Toronto Public Library participated on the original working group CULC established to advance this project. Vickery Bowles is a CELA Board member and national lead on collections; Linda Hazzan is member of the Board's Community Relations Committee.

The presentation to CULC of the Dr. Dayton M.
