Care About Internet Privacy Prove It

The issue It's about Facebook or Twitter. It's about web users' personal information. It's about privacy. It's about what you can do to protect it.

Twitter advising all 330 million users to change their passwords after bug exposed them in plain text

There's apparently no evidence of any breach or misuse, but you should change your password anyway.

Twitter is urging all of its more than 330 million users to immediately change their passwords after a bug exposed them in plain text. While Twitter's investigation showed that there was no evidence that any breach or misuse of the unmasked passwords occurred, the company is recommending that users change their Twitter passwords out of an "abundance of caution," both on the site itself and anywhere else they may have used that password, which includes third-party apps like Twitteriffic and TweetDeck.
